Yesterday at 3 p. w. Bishop Kain delly red the third of his Lenten lectures to a very large congregation. In his two for mer lectures the Bishop had explained the recessity and nature of the work accomslighed by the world's Redgemer. Therein he had shown how completely the Saviour had restored fallen man to the high, supernatural state of which he had been robbed by sin. Indeed his argument was the that through the grace of the Redemption man receives far more than he had for of an attenuated cyclone.

body was also to form the nucleus of the Christian ministry, endowed with the most actionaling powers for the great work of sanctifying the sonis of men by applying to them the divine merits of the Savior. Not only therefore did he commission them in the most solemn manner to go and teach all nations, guaranteeing it is own continued presence with them in the discharge of their high mission; but He also authorized and commanded them to regenerate the souls of believers by the sacrament of baptism, to impart the forgiveness of sins, to communicate the Holy Ghost, to consecrate and distribute His scred living body and most precious blood, etc., etc. All these sacred ministerial sets had for their object the application to individual souls of the graces of redemption, and the restoration of the gitts forfeited by sin. The legited history of the early church, recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, shows how faithfully the orders of our Blessed Redomer were carried out. Under the leadership of Peter, to whom had been entrated the feeding of the entire flock of Christ, the apostles and those who were associated with them in the work of the holy ministry, preached, baptized, absolved, confirmed, distributed the cucharistic food, &c. This is that "glorious church," of which St. Paul speaks in such glowing language in his Epistle to the Ephesiaus. It is through the instrumentality of this church of Christ, that men are to be brought to the certain knowledge of the truthof salvation; and it is through the instrumentality of this same church that they are to receive the purchased graces of redemp-

There is no familier performance on the stage than the Mudden and Mudenbey of Barry and Fay in the amusing comedy, "Irish Aristocracy," Both are humorous in the highest degree, and yet give two distinct types of Irish tchractor, one serving as an excellent foil to the other, and yet both so excruciating in funny that their very appearance on the stage sends the audience off into convulsions of laughter, and from their first entrance to the closing three-handed reel, there is hardly a line that they speak or a situation on the stage that does not keep the audience in a roar.

After Dobler was locked up the detective, constable and other parties interested repaired to the new home of his family, recently built by him, and there made search and inquiry for papers, books, or anything that would give them a key to the mysterious transactions, and were rewarded by old envelops with various postmarks, justices, printed blanks and books containing a complete record of the fictions names used as attorneys, justices, etc. The Belairs Independent declares: "A few persons, however, have known for a long time that Joseph was guilty of sending out transdulent statements to individuals or firms who have had judgments taken in this city for the amount of the costs, but the amounts were small and he escaped prosecution for these. Everybody who knew him, however, has wondered how he managed to live so easily. He has done as near nothing as a man could well do, ever since he got into trouble some years ago about cheating the Government out of revenue in the cisar business, but escaped the punishment."

Dobler a year or so ago got into trouble with a German girl whom he met on the steamer on his way home from Germany. The girl was on her way to Cincinnati, where she had relatives. She was easily daped by Dobler, who claimed to be a single man, and under promise of marriago he succeeded in ruining the unprotected girl. For this crime the sconndrel goes unpunished to-day, aithough a gentleman in the West interested himself in the girl's case and wrote to Bellaire shout it.
